

The Grand Master's Address on the Feast of Saint Michael

The Greeting

Brothers and companions in arms, welcome to this sacred hall on this most auspicious Feast of St. Michael Today, under the banner of our holy patroness — the eternal exemplar of faith, and chivalry—we gather to witness a transformation.

To those who stand before us preparing to take the solemn oath: look around you. You are not merely entering an Order; you are joining a lineage. You stand in the shadow of centuries of brave souls who chose honor over ease, and the protection of the weak over personal gain.

Approach the altar with a clear heart. Remember that the accolade you receive today is not a reward for past deeds, but a profound commitment to your future conduct.

Finally, guard your honor above all earthly treasures. Wealth fades, titles crumble, and kingdoms fall, but a flawless reputation and a clean conscience endure through eternity. Be a beacon of loyalty to your oath, to your companions, and to the ideals of this Order.

Go forth now with our blessing. Ride with honor, live with humility, and let the light of St. Michael guide your every step.
